Pre-Hash.

In dribs and drabs the somewhat reluctant hashers arrived, maybe something to do with the gathering grey clouds and possible downpour. The car park chosen by Bent Banana was somewhat unorthodox, consisting of an unfinished road in a building site surrounded by mud. We did experience a shower as more cars were arriving; this made parking even more.....interesting?

The Brief

Hares Bent Banana and his not-so lovely assistant Ding-a-Ling gave the usual spiel about the trail, even chucked in that ol' chestnut that if you can't find paper then "somebody must have removed it" .....Aye right!

The gullible hashers were informed the walk would be 5.5 km and the run 7.5 km (More of that later).

The Trail

Just before the off, our Religious Advisor 'Rubber Duck' worked his magic and lo and behold the sun came out, brilliant blue skies and even a breeze.

The direction of On On was pointed out, where we immediately came across the first section of barbed-wire, after negotiating this we followed the path through the woods emerging by a large pond surrounded by reeds. During the rainy season this area is a marsh, so good call (luck?) by the hares to pre-empt the boggy conditions.

The trail followed paths, which made the going underfoot considerably easy going. Another section of barbed wire appeared, Knockout Neptune was heard saying the wire was just at garrote height. I suppose it would have been if the rest of the hashers were also 6' 11" tall.

The path wandered through woods providing a nice bit of shade. Emerging on to a "well" used cow pasture (minus cows) yet another section of barbed wire appeared. To reach the wire, the hares had included another obstacle. This was a large patch of mud mixed with cow dung. Penny Lane was first to venture forth. Halfway across, his legs went from under him, landing on his posterior (I'm not allowed to say arse). Instead of getting to his feet immediately he had a quick glance around to see if anyone had witnessed this embarrassing stunt. The only hasher nearby was Jock Twat, now, he's not going to tell anyone is he? Bwahahahah!

After the cow pat slime, the hares had another cunning plan, they thought “why don’t we have the runners undertake a one-kilometer stretch without paper?” This could be the reason why Mudman & Bite Mark managed to complete 12 km of a trail which should have been 7.5 km.

The hares planning the route.

Prior to the On In, there was another section of barbed-wire, Bejesus! We saw more of the wretched stuff than was used at the Battle of the Somme!

Good trail by the hares, a lot of hard work had obviously been involved. Another thoroughly enjoyable afternoon.

The Rambo Trail as completed by Easy Off

The Circle

A big thank you to the “Beir Frau Team”. Without these hard working ladies there would be no refreshments. (The Beir-Meister only brings the stuff to the hash). So well done girls.

Down Downs by GM

Hares: Bent Banana & Ding-a-Ling

Hero of the Day: Slime – completing the Rambo trail and leading the way when the FRB's got lost.
Virgins: Bee and Jay introduced by Knockout and Max Factor translation by Easy Off. Ceremony conducted by our very own Mad Mullah 'Mustafa-Leak'
Non Hash T-Shirt: Bent Banana
Centennial Runner: Head Ballcock 100 runs – Mug + Box Archa.
Centennial Runner: Ding-a-Ling awarded Box of M Beer to go with his 100 mug earned on Run 508.
Ding-a-Ling explained the reason for the beer as this was a cost saving exercise for centennial awards.
Next weeks Run: Cathusalems on behalf of Hares for the CAH3 AGM.

The On After: Bullies Hin Lek Fai

Some excellent food & beverages were enjoyed by the ravenous/thirsty hashers, good venue.

Always remember; never let the truth get in the way of a good story.

That's all folks.
