Pre-Hash

Excellent turnout for the Hash, 60+ considering there was 'no directions' having said that the location was very nice, weather perfect should be a good walk/run.

There were many returners, welcome back to all of them, virgin hares in the circle to tell us all of any hazards, none were mentioned, on on was called, walkers east, runners west all to meet later on the trail.

The Walkers Trail (by HYHMY)

The walkers set off at a leisurely pace admiring the scenery and the smoke houses that we passed, there were fields of Tapioca, so I was told by a knowledgeable source, but no paper, no worries, one of the hares was up ahead, just follow him, some concerns though when we turned right off the main path how would the back walkers know where to go, Space Cowboy went back to point the way.

Confident that the hare new where he was going we carried on, we eventually came across paper, 'hooray' on further investigation though we saw that we were already back at the car park, my time 35mins

Already a lot of walkers were back, no runners at that time, Latecomer being one of the frontrunners informed me, when I told him we followed the hare, that the hare was following them, every time they shouted 'no paper' the hare just indicated for them to carry on.

All back nice and early for the Beer and wonderful snacks.

The Runners Trail (by Tinks)

With the walkers having gone east we set off west onto the tarmac road looking for paper. The 14 runners opted to follow the road in a southerly direction but I decided this was going in the wrong direction and as I was last man did a 180 and headed back towards the start and then headed west across the open ground. Paper was eventually found and the runners charged ahead. However the paper was hard to find and the front runners found themselves spread out over large areas looking for trail. This was not helped by the trucks moving earth out of deep excavation and crossing over the trails. Having found trail the runners started to stretch out as we made our way through sugar cane and pineapple fields. One check had the pack confused for a while which allowed me to catch up again. With some paper misleading the pack to thinking we were going further away from home it transpired that we should have gone east towards home and soon after paper was found. But this was short lived as the paper became less and less. However perseverance by the hounds managed to find the trail with calls that we were going round in circles and revisiting already past excavations. This was not the case and we eventually came to the wall. All runners made it over the wall and across the road to continue on with the trail. Upon looking to my right I could see the Blue barn and the HHH sign to the car park but refrained from taking a short cut back. If I had known that the walkers were already back by this time I would have gone and enjoyed the beer and snacks that they were already into.

A short way on the second part of the trail we came to many charcoal burners and the merge with the walkers trail. We also had a similar issue with lack of paper that our walking colleagues had however perseverance by all kept us on the main trail, although Slackbladder had the calling to shortcut back home with the excuse that he had only been on the runners trail as the walkers was considered to be rather short for his liking. Eventually we all returned back to the beer truck in just over the hour.
