Pre-Hash

A good turnout on an overcast day with rain threatening. Most arrived well before 4.30 pm which gave us plenty time to ponder as to why there were so many Thai relics lined up at the base of the hill. Mention was made of ghosts and spirits present, but none were observed before or after the run only beer and Jim's wine.

The circle was called, and a comprehensive briefing given by the hares with Onefer drawing attention to possible hazards on the trail; electric fences, dogs, cows, floods, mud etc. Most hashers paid attention especially the bit about the electric fences, not wishing to get 12 volts up the jacksy which can be painful but stimulating.

The RUN!

A prompt start at 5pm saw the runners steam ahead to the first check. Thereafter they vanished into the distance, but reports suggest they were like headless chickens at other checks. Some mumbling about paper spread in several directions and unclear arrow arranging were heard at various times from the walkers. However, on we continued safe in the knowledge we were heading in the right direction as the Temple was clearly visible for miles around. Onefer had kindly told us of the temple earlier at the briefing. We continued on paper reaching the main road having carefully negotiated safe passage past a lot of cows. We were met by a slightly irate Onefer informing us that we had missed the trail and should have gone around the said cows. He was studiously ignored and on we went to the temple.

Up the steep hill to the temple, where at the Buddha, we were able to have a great view of the surrounding countryside. No time to pause, on to the steps and down to road level, back on to paper. Soon the dreaded electric fences came into view, but the Hares had done great job of wrapping the wires and providing sticks to part the wires for access. We took turns to be the wire lifter, so no one got a nasty shock.

At the split we continued on the runner's trail which seemed to consist of a large loop through the bushes returning just beside the merge point. A short walk and we were back at the start.

The Circle

GM Legs Wide Open called the pack to order and awarded the following down downs:

Leavers: Brambles, Bill, Spook, Old Macdonald, Big Macker Knacker & Ballbanger.

Next Weeks CAH# Hares: Donkey Cock and Dim Wit.

On After

The On On was at the Tum restaurant but unfortunately no one seems to have told the proprietor as the place was closed and in darkness. (ps. Regrettably Tum failed to answer phone calls made around 5:00pm). Sadly, we learned his wife was quite ill so no meal at Tums. We quickly agreed to head to the Esan restaurant on Pala U road where we were greeted and fed and watered with smiles and speed. Unbeknown to us another group of Hashers were also there but seated in the garden. As we were eating, we decided to stay put so we dined separately.

A good Hash, good trail and lots of fun.
