Pre-Hash and Briefing

Pleasant weather and dry thanks to RA Colossus welcomed the gathering Hashers. Not a bad turn out considering that the second half of the Rugby World Cup first semi-final between England and the All Blacks was about to start. In total 36 hashers were present for the pre-run briefing from Hare Ahmedashed. Two trails, Wimp's and Rambo's, no cattle, one fence crossing and paper on the right except when you are on the road when it will be on your left. A couple of false trails to keep the pack together.

The TRAIL

With the briefing over the pack set off other than Cathusalem who was following the rugby on his mobile phone and set out later taking a much shorter trail home after the second check. The trail headed towards the hills and then left through trees and getting more and more overgrown before coming out alongside a fence and onto the first check. A rather long false trail which had all the FRB's behind the walking pack. On along the fence line to a second check which again had the pack spending a bit of time finding trail. Tinks found an unclosed false trail so that was the second (couple) on trail already. Brambles commented shouldn't be any more then. As the pack ventured closer to the hills, Screwdriver offered assistance in leading a short cut to the next check. As I approached a left tun with paper on the right I was advised by Colossus that the trail went right and that he was on a short cut to the walker's trail. Shortly after that the trail came to the official split with walker's going left and Rambo's to the right. The Rambo trail headed off towards the road and I missed the right turn, but it was more obvious coming in the opposite direction. The trail continued through heavy grass land and at one point I saw paper to the right only for it to run out. So back tracking and back on paper over a small headwall and then out onto a more defined trail next to a cassava planted area. Paper went right but I saw one Hasher in the distance to my left. Should have followed him but opted to follow the trail on a large loop to eventually come back to the same cassava patch. The trail then went to the road and left. The trail then took another left and headed back towards the hills, the out trail and the merge point with the walker's trail. From here the trail then veered off to the right and headed back towards the road before breaking left through grassland. I am sure at this point several of the hashers seeing the road decided to take the easy way out and took the road back to the cars. For those that stayed n trail the going got more and more difficult especially through the Eucalyptus trees and the out onto the original out trail and then back to the start.

Pre-Circle

Being the last back, everybody was into the beverage and the excellent snacks prepared by Lost Cause. Still plenty left for me though. The beer was nicely chilled and the banter ongoing. As dusk drew in some hashers started to depart so it was time to call the circle.

The ON-After

About 10 made their way to the on after with only Donga getting lost on route. The directions were, I thought clear, when you are on the klong (canal) road continue to the first set of traffic lights and turn left. Instead Donga goes straight however eventually he realized his error and joined us some 15 minutes later. Dave the Rave also joined the party. This was our second visit to this restaurant and again we received quick service and cold beers at reasonable prices especially the beer at only 60 per large bottle.
