Pre-Run

The First Hash of the New Year and New Decade saw a healthy turnout on a bright and cool afternoon.

The Trail

After the briefing and a vague wave of the hand by the lead Hare to indicate the direction of the trail we set off on masse. However, after the fast runners failed to find the trail most of us were reduced to headless chickens until that wily old fox Brambles Bill in a different direction found paper. On On was the cry at which moment the scribe stood upon some thorns and stopped immediately. It was trouble- some removing the thorn to the extent that I was passed by Cathusalem and other slower walkers. By the time I was ready to restart everyone had gone so off I set to recover time. I was able to follow paper into the area of local demolition and the rejects from Steptoe's scrap yard. In the distance were the back markers whom I caught and passed but also passed the paper to the first right turn as did Jock Twat. We quickly retraced our steps and found the trail to the first split. Jock Twat headed on to the walker's trail whilst your scribe decided to do the runner's trail. Later having got lost it became clear who the real Twat was!

The next section was more hash friendly albeit I was on my own and at times paper was rarer than hens' teeth. Up to the foothills without incident but a right turn sent me off on the False trail. After a while, the penny dropped, and I returned to the sharp left turn and the trail. Eventually the trail ran out of hill and so I began the descent. The trail was ok, but I was never sure if the paper was on the ground or up a tree. I eventually reached the merge sign, which normally gives a hint that we are on the final section and home. Unfortunately, at this point I lost paper and the trail. After coming across a very confusing ring of paper sometime later which seemed to go back up the hill, I decided to rely upon my finely honed navigational skills. Sometime earlier up the hill I could see the lake by the car park and noted that the sun was in the west. So, I set off in a westerly direction to find the trail homewards. I only found paper right at the end of the trail. Fortunately, I emerged from the woods near to the car park.

On After:

After a few beers and some chit chat I realized that I was not alone in my difficulty of finding paper. In discussion with Cathusalem he reminded me to always take a mobile phone in case one gets lost or injured. I will in future.
