Pre-Run

A return to Cathusalem's favorite area behind the Japanese Mall on the bypass. As the pack gathered the refreshments were unloaded and iced by early arrivals in readiness for our return from the run. Meanwhile African Queen collected the taxes as the attendees swelled to thirty-nine by the time of departure following the run briefing by Cathusalem. Four trails, a short, medium, long and Rambo trail. Paper on the right, no barbed wire crossings, possible false trails, the odd dog but not a problem and possibly some cows.

The Trail

With the briefing over the pack headed out north and then turned east to the first check. Trail called to the left and then broke right onto a gravel road leading to the short walk split to the right. The rest of the pack headed south and then east to the Rambo split. The Rambos carrying on eastwards while the long and medium walk went south to the split with long walk to the left and the medium walk to the right. At this point Dimwit was looking for company while I was contemplating taking the medium walk. However, I changed my mind and joined Dimwit and continued on a concrete road to the merge point with the Rambo trail. It was while on this section that the Rambo's joined us and when we reached the check the Rambos were still looking for trail. Paper was found on to the left through a gap in the fence line. Having remembered Cathusalems briefing that there were no barbed wire fence crossings I proposed that the trail was to the right of the fence. Cock in the Frock agreed to go look, although so often he gets most of the checks wrong. After about 100 m in knee high grass he found paper and so we headed on westwards towards the bypass and skirting a plantation before arriving at the Medium Walk merge point. From here on it was a familiar trail from previous excursions to this area and eventually joined up with the Short Walk. The trail then went through scrub land and merged onto a gravel road and then headed on back to the start.
