The Trail

With the forecast saying there was an 80% chance of rain the hares Paddy Red Belly and Rubber Duck we're hoping to keep up their traditional trail of water, water, and more water but the forecast was wrong and we all had fine weather throughout. After the first kilometer the trail turned to the left but yours truly (Paddy Red Belly) had laid paper a bit too close on the right which was the runners run home that was rectified with a loud shout, and everybody was off on the proper trail. The first check and false trail was missed as the front runners assumed the trail went along the fence to the right and the lucky Bastards were right (the false trail was uphill and a kilometer long). Second false trail was picked up by Sodomy so nobody else was inconvenienced. Whilst laying the trail the Hares dropped a blue trail sign which caused some confusion as the short walk arrow pointed towards barbed wire common sense prevailed and the paper was followed. The trail then split with the short walkers following the on in and the runners going to play with the barbed wire. Refreshments we're enjoyed by all with the usual high standard of jokes (NOT). Two baptism's were performed. On After was at Chef Jack lovely food but service a bit slow accompanied by table changes.
