Pussy Pedaller gave me a lift to the site. 'It's not far, this one' he said - and he was right - barely five minutes by car from the centre of HH and we arrived at an old quarry.

On one side a boulder jutted up, sometime scarred by the teeth of a big yellow machine, and not far away was a high bluff with loose boulders close to the summit, looking like they needed just the gentlest of nudges to send them crashing down.

Were we going up there? No, said Hugs - our lead hare for the day. This was welcome as the weather was sultry and humid. The circle briefing cautioned that there were a lot of cows on the route - yet in the event I didn't see one.

The route set off on fresh tarmac and in no time at all people were dispersing - was it a check? In the event the route carried straight on and I didn't see any sticks at that point - the runners made a false turn it seemed..

Then on past a large construction site with workers laying concrete formwork in a ten foot deep trench - what on earth were they building? We then veered off the metalled road and into light jungle scrub with a lot of new barbed wire fencing on display, but none of it had to be crossed.

No cows but plenty of 'evidence' - 'are we following paper or cow shit?' someone asked.

(Editor's note - Blowjob must be following cow shit and didn't see the cows)

The route was reasonably level and undemanding, with a few dry ditches and just one active stream - but that was a mere footstep across.

A nice 3 mile jaunt on a sticky day, then back for beer and the usual impeccable management of the hash snacks courtesy of Lost Cause - the dips were particularly nice.

Thanks to the hares: Hugmanannygoat and Virgin Pat - who was gracefully spared censure for sporting new shoes.

A good turnout of 58 hashers including no fewer than five virgins, so a big welcome to:
